

Boys' Literacy Through Visual and Media Arts A Learning Through the Arts® Teacher Institute

The latest research indicates boys are falling behind in reading and writing at an alarming rate. Bring the language arts curriculum to life by exploring carefully scaffolded arts experiences as relevant methodologies and experience first hand how our boys (and girls) can enjoy active, in-depth literacy learning, across the curriculum. Discover how to create your own comic through the Comic Life software that is generally available at most schools and then how to use this technology to teach literacy in the classroom. Popular facilitator John Scully along with former principal and OISE instructor Adele Jeffrey will guide participants through incorporating graphic novels into effective literacy instruction techniques for boys (and girls).

Friday, April 23, 2010, 9:00 - 3:00
TELUS Centre, 273 Bloor Street West, Toronto (at Avenue Rd.)
$198 - Includes a meal and an extensive handbook

Register at www.regonline.com/lttatoronto0910

Facilitator: John Scully

John Scully has a degree in photography from Ryerson University and worked as a visual artist, freelance editorial photographer and teacher for more than 15 years. His artistic work combines both traditional and digital photographic techniques.

He teaches photography and digital imaging courses and workshops at a variety of schools across Toronto. He is also proud to be a red head.

The Royal ConservatoryTM
The finest instrument is the mind.